THE ARCHITECTURAL HERITAGE OF CHRISTCHURCH

7. Nurses' Memorial Chapel
Preface

Christchurch has a charm that depends to a large extent on features built or planned by people. The quiet dignity of the city owes much to its early buildings. It is still possible to trace the history of Christchurch in the many fine examples of colonial architecture that remain. Action by the New Zealand Historic Places Trust (Canterbury Regional Committee) and other public interest groups has saved several important city buildings including the Provincial Government Buildings, Trinity Church, the Theatre Royal and the old university (now the Christchurch Arts Centre).

As the city grows and changes, there is a danger that historically or environmentally valuable buildings may be thoughtlessly or needlessly destroyed. The Christchurch City Council District Planning Scheme lists 190 historic buildings and objects. Although the scheme encourages their preservation, in the end only the determination of the community can effectively protect or revitalise buildings it considers important.

One of the major aims of the present series of booklets is the identification and description of the city’s most valuable historic buildings, in the hope that greater public awareness of their importance will increase their chances of survival. Even if preservation should prove impossible in some cases, this series will gather information, illustrations and analyses of each building to provide a published record of the city’s rich architectural heritage.

If these booklets encourage you to think about the historic significance of this city’s architecture, and help you to recognise the special value of Christchurch’s historic buildings, then they will have served their purpose.

Nurses' Memorial Chapel

Introduction

The Christchurch Hospital Nurses' Memorial Chapel was built during 1927 and 1928 and is located on the Christchurch Hospital site, fronting Riccarton Avenue. Although twice threatened with demolition, the building's future has been secured.

The chapel is of vital cultural importance. It is:

- As far as can be ascertained, the only purpose-built, hospital chapel which commemorates nurses who died in the Great War, in the world;
- New Zealand's only memorial chapel to women who died in any war or the 1918 influenza epidemic;
- New Zealand's first hospital chapel;
- A repository of memorials to local, national and internationally known medical men and women;
- An architecturally significant building with a late Gothic Revival structure and Arts & Crafts Movement-inspired interior that incorporates significant works of art, including stained glass windows by Veronica Whall.

The need for a hospital chapel

Matron Mabel Thurston¹ is said to have promoted the need for a hospital chapel for some time.² The impetus was to be provided by a war tragedy.

The Marquette disaster

The Marquette was built in Glasgow in 1898 and known formerly as the Boardicea. She was a large steamer of 7057 tons used as a cargo vessel before being converted to a transport at the beginning of the war. The Marquette was not a hospital ship.

On 19 October 1915 the Marquette sailed on the Aegean from Alexandria for Salonika at 7 pm. On board was the No. 1 New Zealand Stationary Hospital which included 36 nurses of the New Zealand Army Nursing Service and staff from the New Zealand Medical Corps. Also on board were the 500 officers and troops comprising the British 29th Divisional Ammunition Column complete with equipment and mules. The total number of people was 741.

For part of the journey the Marquette was escorted by a French destroyer but this left on the night before the attack. The ship was torpedoed at approximately 9 am on 23 October. There was an explosion and the ship listed to port. The survivors moved quickly to put on life-belts and abandon ship. They had been drilled on the voyage and knew the risk.

The lowering of the life-boats proved difficult. On the port side one of the boats fell on another in the water killing and injuring people. Many of the eighteen nurses on the starboard side were tipped out as the boats were lowered. Of the eighteen nurses on the port side one wrote:

¹ Throughout, the designation 'Matron' has been given to the chief nurse to avoid confusion. It is recognised that the official title has varied.
² Bennett 1962, 244.
While standing on the deck, I saw a boat load of men in uniform getting away. I wondered why we nurses were left on deck, without a chance of getting into a boat... perhaps on the starboard side the nurses may have all got into boats; but not on the port side.\textsuperscript{1}\textsuperscript{3}

One boat with nurses (and that was waterlogged) left the Marquette.\textsuperscript{4} The command was finally given: 'Every man for himself.'\textsuperscript{5} Several men and four nurses were seen on the deck as the ship went down. Two of these women survived in spite of being sucked under water initially.\textsuperscript{6} The Marquette sank in approximately ten minutes.

The water was cold because it was autumn and many died from eight to nine hours of exposure and exhaustion. It was a day of 'endurance, anguish, sacrifice, cowardice and courage.'\textsuperscript{7} Numerous people gave up their lives helping others.

One group in boats reached Greece but most of the survivors were picked up by the British destroyers Lynn and the French destroyers Mortier and Tirailleur. They were treated with great care. On 29 October all surviving nurses and some of the medical officers sailed from Salonika back to Alexandria on the hospital ship Grantully Castle.

In total 167 people died. The ten nursing sisters were: Marion S. Brown, Isabel Clark, Catherine A. Fox, Mary Gorman, Nona M. Hildyard, Helena K. Isdell, Mabel E. Jamieson, Mary H. Rae, Lorna A. Rattray and Margaret Rogers.

Some of the survivors were extremely ill. Acting Matron Marie Cameron never fully recovered. Many served for the rest of the war overseas while others returned to New Zealand to work. At least one nurse, Hilda Hooker, retired on a war pension (as a result of pleurisy and typhoid following the disaster), after working for a brief period as acting matron at Trentham.\textsuperscript{8}

Extensive lists and photographs of people were printed in New Zealand.\textsuperscript{9} A story circulated the international press that the nurses had cried that the 'fighting men' be rescued first when they were found. The nurses later refuted this but the story had great public appeal.

An enquiry was held on the Taibot at Salonika on 26 October and sisters Edith Popplewell and Edith Wilkin gave evidence. They also received a lot of flattery.\textsuperscript{10}

A report promised by British authorities in 1916 to the New Zealand Government was allegedly never sent and no in-depth findings were published in New Zealand.\textsuperscript{11}

Many questions pertain to this disaster the main one being why was an entire stationary hospital with equipment and staff placed on a transport and not a hospital ship? The presence of an ammunition column made the Marquette a legitimate target and a plum one. Hospital ships sailed frequently from Alexandria and indeed the Grantully Castle travelled empty for Salonika on the same day as the Marquette.\textsuperscript{12}

Nurse Jean Sinclair claimed that news of the sinking was circulating Salonika hours before the event took place, the implication being that the Marquette was a planned, rather than random target.\textsuperscript{13}

The survivors' reports published in New Zealand were subject to military censorship. Even so there is a sense of anguish over a blunder expressed by some. Others state that they had more to say.

Many British hospital ships were sunk after 1915, but the full story of the Marquette disaster has yet to be told. One of the earliest, major, medical disasters at sea of World War I has been ignored virtually in histories published outside New Zealand.

The three Marquette victims who trained at Christchurch Hospital

Nona Hildyard of Lyttelton was 26.14 She was a noted swimmer but died apparently after being hit by an overturning life-boat several hours after the sinking. A portrait of her by Richard Wallwork, unveiled by the Countess of Liverpool on 8 March 1917, is in the former Lyttelton Borough Council Building.15

Lorna Rattray came from a prominent Dunedin family. She left New Zealand on the Maheno and was nursing at Port Said, Egypt. Edith Popplewell supported her in the water until she died.16

Margaret Rogers came from Banks Peninsula. Her body was found in a boat with those of Helena Iseidell from Kumara and four unidentified men. There were strong rumours that they had been shot but there appears to be no official record of this. The six victims were buried with naval honours at Safaga.17

The call for a memorial

News of the disaster appeared in New Zealand newspapers in early November 1915. A memorial service was held at St Michael and All Angels’ Anglican Church, Christchurch, on 9 November. A collection was taken with the express intention of erecting a memorial chapel at Christchurch Hospital. This became the nucleus of a fund.18

Enthusiasm for the chapel was immediate, and the editor of Kai Tiaki indicated that it would be a memorial to all ten nurses.19

Dr P. Clennell Fenwick wrote from Zeitoun, Egypt to the North Canterbury Hospital Board20 asking if they had done anything to commemorate the Marquette nurses.21 At their meeting of 16 February 1916 they considered the letter. Dr Walter Fox was asked to report to the board on what had been done about ‘the erection of a Memorial Chapel proposed sometime since.’22

In the board meeting on 23 February 1916, W.W. Tanner suggested the memorial should have a wide scope and embrace ‘the name of any Nurse who loses her life in the Hospital service.’23 Matron Thurston’s report included strong support for a memorial chapel in the grounds of the hospital which would fill ‘a long felt want’.24 Letters of condolence were sent to relatives by the board.

14 Her name has taken different spellings in publications and on memorials after the disaster, but is spelt ‘Nona Hildyard’ in her hand, in the Christchurch Hospital staff roll book.

The influenza epidemic

As if the war had not been enough New Zealand was devastated in the latter months of 1918 by an influenza epidemic that claimed approximately 8500 lives nationally. Fourteen doctors and at least thirty nurses died after duty.26

At Christchurch Hospital, Dr Aubrey V. Short died from influenza on 15 November 1918, aged 28 years. He received his medical diploma in 1914, just as war broke out. Dr Short left as NZMC surgeon-captain with the First Contingent and landed at Gallipoli on the first day of the attack. He later went to France and served until November, 1917, having been promoted to major and appointed Deputy-Assistant Director of Medical Services. Dr Short also received the Military Cross, not an easy decoration to win. He had returned to New Zealand in January of 1918 and joined the staff of Christchurch Hospital in March as a senior house-surgeon.27

Two nurses on duty at Christchurch Hospital succumbed to influenza. Hilda Hooker died on 21 November 1918 aged 22 as a 'probationer' nurse in her second year.28 Grace C. Beswick died on 25 November 1918 aged 25. She had just completed her training and was the sister of Mary Beswick, a Marquette survivor.29

Grace and Hilda would be commemorated specifically in the building of the chapel.

One other Christchurch Hospital-trained nurse, Margaret H. Thompson, was a World War I victim. Two graduates, Ina G. Leech and Agnes E. Widdowson, died in the epidemic after duty in other hospitals. All seven people have plaques in the chapel.

Moves to build the Memorial Chapel

Revd Harry W. Smith was licensed to the Christchurch Hospital chaplaincy on 18 September 1923 and took up the cause of the proposed chapel. Through his efforts and those of Matron Rose Muir, Nurse Maude, the Hospital Lady Visitors' Association (HLVA) and The Nurses' Memorial Chapel Committee under the chairmanship of Dr Fox, the building came into material existence.

In July of 1924 Matron Rose Muir wrote to the board stressing the urgent need for a chapel.30 Staff had donated more funds and the HLVA had been collecting but public subscriptions could not be asked for, nor an estimate of the cost of a chapel be obtained, until the board gave permission to build. It was decided that the chapel should be interdenominational. In January 1925 the board sanctioned the building of a chapel in the hospital grounds. A site was approved in a letter of 2 July 1925 after much discussion with the Ministry of Health.31 The Board would pay for the foundations and have the use of the basement.32

The land on which the chapel stands is in 1990 owned by the CAHB in fee simple. The site occupied by the hospital (including the chapel) was taken out of Hagley Park and given to the original hospital authority in 1887 under the Christchurch Hospital Act of the same year.

26 The latter figure is probably greater because some former nurses who volunteered and died would be described on death-certificates as 'housewives' if married. Letter, 2 Feb. 1990, Dr Geoffrey Rice to Fiona Cifaran.

30 Munel Smith, the widow of Chaplain Harry Smith, in 1990 is amsent that the board gave the land on which the chapel stands in perpetuity in exchange for use of the basement. It must be assumed that this was a gentlemen's agreement.
The appeal

The churches gave their full support to the proposal. Revd Smith's letter which sought donations was published with commentary that the chapel would be a memorial to the Marquette nurses and to all nurses who died on military service during the war. The NCHB was declined permission by the Ministry of Health to make a grant and the Government decided not to give funds towards the chapel. Hospital staff and the public would have to fund it, and they did.

The foundation stone

The foundation stone was laid on 15 March 1927 by the Duke of York, later His Majesty King George VI. The stone records the name of the Duchess of York (now Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth the Queen Mother), because the ceremony was to have been performed by her, but she was ill.

The architect

John Goddard Collins (1886-1973) was born in Christchurch and joined the practice of Collins & Harman in 1903. He was a foundation member of the New Zealand Institute of Architects and designed many buildings in Christchurch including the Sign of the Takahe and Nazareth House Chapel.

The plans dated 10 January 1927 and specification of 1926 for the chapel reveal his great attention to detail. He designed the chapel, and supervised its construction, free of charge. Collins retired in 1955.

An appeal was launched in earnest in November 1925 with street collections and a Hospital Sunday was held in churches. A total of £3000 was required and already £800 had been collected.

The response was good and the bulk of the donations came from the public. The chapel cost £3486. There was a surplus of £148 for chapel furnishings.

The speech given by Dr Fox on the day, in the form of an illuminated manuscript, is framed on the back of the south vestry door. In it the chapel is designated as a memorial to nurses Hildyard, Rattray and Rogers of the Marquette and influenza victims, nurses Beswick and Hooker. The chapel takes its name from these five women.

The building

The chapel was built in 1927-28 by William H. Williamson of Williamson Construction Company. He described this as the 'finest building he ever built.' The contract was agreed to on 10 January 1927 between Williamson and The Nurses' Memorial Chapel Committee.

The floor. There is a reinforced concrete floor, with a basement. This is entered from the liturgical south side by stairs to the outside. On the original plan these were to have been on the north side. The parquette floor by the Wanganui Sash and Door Co. is of blackwood and oak tinted yellow, set in mastic on the concrete floor.

Oamaru stone. The chancel arch, walls above the panelling at each end of the nave and chancel, corbels, bedmoulds and the crosses on the gables are of Oamaru stone.

Brickwork. The chapel displays a varied use of brick. The walls are of cavity brick construction. On the exterior splayed terracotta blocks can be seen over the window heads. Herringbone (diagonal pattern) brickwork, is a feature of the gables and two window heads. The decorative cornice running under the eaves is of moulded brick and a moulded brick string course (continuous horizontal band), runs below the windows. The window jambs are of scotia (concave) brick. The arches are of gauged scotia. The solid buttresses have a circular weathering (slope) of gauged brick.

Woodwork. Window frames, sills and door frames are of black pine. Other timber is predominantly oregon including the Tudor-headed wall and door panels.

The roof. There is an open, stained timber roof. This is covered with purple slates with green slate bands.

Windows. The nave windows have Tudor arches. The gables behind the vestries and larger windows are a departure from Collins' original plan.

40 In 1942 a plan for an air-raid shelter in the basement was drawn up by S. W. Minson, Canterbury Museum, Pictorial Archives.

Measurements

- Nave 13.72m x 7.32 m (45ft x 24 ft).
- Chancel 4.27m x 3.93m (14 ft x 12 ft 9ins).
- Vestries 3.65m x 3.05m (12ft x 10ft).
- Floor to roof apex 6.71m (22ft).

Aesthetically the interior presents a well-crafted, well-proportioned and warm environment that invites and soothes.
The chapel's life

The first service was held at 5.15 am on Christmas Day, 1927. The chapel was handed over to the NCHB on 25 July 1928. Of the building Dr Fox wrote: 'we are parting with a child for your adoption...knowing that you will bestow and endow it with every reasonable consideration realising the high purpose for which the Chapel has been built.'

Since opening this chapel has never been closed or locked. Although sited at one end of the hospital it was conveniently on the route of nurses travelling to and from the Nurses’ Home. The chapel doors are wide enough to accommodate people in wheelchairs and beds.

Regular worship has been conducted along with confirmations, baptisms, carols, remembrance and reunion services and Sunday School. Nativity Plays and missions have also taken place in the chapel. A Florence Nightingale (later Nurses’ Day), service has been held in May. In the 1930s a special Marquette service was held in October. The tradition of the latter is to be reinstated in 1990, the 75th anniversary of Gallipoli, and the Marquette sinking.

Eight funerals are known to have been held in the chapel. The first was probably that of George Bell on 29 October 1928.

There have been at least eighteen weddings and what is said to be the first took place on 17 December 1929, between Nurse Rae McKay and a Dr Shand.

A much-loved building, the chapel has become an important repository of memorials to men and women at some point associated with Christchurch Hospital. Many of these people have given heroic, medical service in war; some under fire.

The stained glass windows

There are nine stained glass windows. Four are by Veronica Whall (1887-1967) a prominent, English, stained glass artist. Her father, Christopher Whall, was the leader of the Arts & Crafts Movement in stained glass. By the age of 13 Veronica Whall had drawn part of a window for Gloucester Cathedral. She went on to a successful career and became a co-director of Whall & Whall Ltd, London. Most of her windows outside Great Britain are in New Zealand. She was an expert in the use of Prior’s Slab glass which has an uneven texture and often a variety of colours in one piece. Her chapel windows use this material to great effect and are richly coloured.

The Angel of Charity and a Waif (1932-33) commemorates Mary Ewart who was matron from 1898-1908. Trained in Belfast, Ewart came to New Zealand in 1885 and in 1887 became the first qualified nurse to join Christchurch Hospital where she worked for 43 years. She died on 22 July 1930. Nurses who had trained under her donated this memorial which was dedicated by Bishop West-Watson on 16 April 1933.

The angel is enthroned on the world and the waif, symbolic of the soul, is protected by the cloak of charity. This work has suffered vandalism from inside the chapel and the child’s arm and hand holding the angel’s hand are all replacements. The William Morris Gallery, London, holds the cartoons for this work and the following window.

Faith and a Sick Child (1936) is a memorial to Sybilla Maude OBE. Known to all as Nurse Maude she was the pioneer of district nursing in New Zealand. Her organisation, established with the assistance of Jessie, Lady Rhodes DSJ, flourishes today. In 1892, after training in London, Nurse Maude worked as matron at Christchurch Hospital from 1893-96 before starting district nursing.

In 1904 Nurse Maude established an open-air camp at New Brighton for TB victims which led to the Government introducing sanatoria. She died on 12 July 1935.

The window was dedicated on 15 November 1936 by the retired Archbishop Julius. The hour-glass and circle represent time and eternity. The symbolic figure has the cross of Faith on her dress and the child, with a head-bandage, has his hands clasped in prayer.

Christ and Children (1938-39) commemorates Annie Patrick. After training at Christchurch Hospital, Patrick studied at St Mary's in London. When she returned to New Zealand in 1920 she was appointed Director of Plunket Nursing. She lectured internationally and her influence was profound. Patrick died on 19 September 1937.

The following three windows were designed probably by The Glass House. in London. This was built in 1951 and operated by stained glass artist Mary Lowndes and Drury. The Royal Red Cross shown in the base of the window is in memory of Mabel Thurston CBE, RRC, who died on 23 July 1960 in England. She left in her will £75 to adorn the chapel and presumably this paid partially for the window. The window was dedicated on 25 June 1939 by Chaplain Henry Williams. Plunket nurses, staff, and many others contributed to the cost. The NCHB gave £5 after it was put to them that Patrick had brought ‘world fame’ to the hospital. The children in the window are shown as healthy and happy as a tribute to her work.

The Angel of Hope (1952-53) is in memory of pioneer nurses. This was donated by Christchurch Hospital-trained nurses who attended the 1951 reunion and symbolises the steadfastness of hope amid the challenges of life. The angel, on a rock lashed by the ever-changing sea, holds an anchor which is the emblem of hope. The sea is also a reminder of the Marquette nurses.

This is probably Whall’s last window and was designed to match the Ewart memorial. Part of the cartoon for this window is in the William Morris Gallery. The dedication by Bishop Warren was on 2 August 1953.

The following three windows were designed probably by Francis Spear and executed at Lowndes & Drury’s studio, The Glass House, in London. This was built in 1906 and operated by stained glass artist Mary Lowndes and Alf Drury, who liaised with the Whalls.

The Conversion of St Paul (1964) was chosen as a suitable subject to commemorate Mabel Thurston CBE, RRC, because of her outstanding service to military nursing. The saint is shown as a soldier on the road to Damascus dedicating his sword to God.

Thurston was matron from 1908 to 1916 and worked hard to see that a children’s ward at Christchurch Hospital was built. During World War I she was matron-in-chief to the NZEF. She worked later as matron at hospitals in Hanmer and Waipukurau. During World War II she gave voluntary service in English hospitals.

Thurston died on 23 July 1960 in England. She left in her will £75 to adorn the chapel and presumably this paid partially for the window.

The window was commissioned by former nurses who trained under her and many former patients and friends contributed. Bishop Warren dedicated the window at the Florence Nightingale service on 10 May 1964.

St Agatha (1967-68), a patron saint of nurses, is in memory of Mary Christmas ARRC who died on 17 April 1964. After training at Christchurch Hospital she served in the Mediterranean (where she survived the Marquette sinking), solely for women. In 1915 it was enlarged and divided into first and second-class sections. Mary Christmas held the latter, the Associate of the Royal Red Cross. This award differs from that in the window by being silver with a smaller, red, Maltese cross on it. Several of the surviving Marquette nurses received the associate decoration after further war service. Since December 1976 the award has been open to men.
Christ and Children, 1938-39

and later in England. In 1923 she became the first tutor sister at the Christchurch Preliminary School of Nursing and retired in 1937.

Members of the Rose Muir Association and servicemen and women gave this window. The association had difficulty obtaining an import licence due to new Government policy. Eventually they were able to prove that a window which harmonised with the existing works should be obtained from the original studio. On 21 April 1968 it was unveiled by Jean Erwin and Emily Hodges, both Marquette survivors, and dedicated by the chaplains.53

St Faith (1971) commemorates Rose Muir MBE, who joined the staff in 1910 and was matron from 1916 to 1936. She died on 12 May 1970. The window was commissioned by the Christchurch School of Nursing Association and unveiled on 14 October 1971 by Grace Widdowson who trained under Muir and was herself matron from 1936 to 1952.54 Muir was aunt to Frank Muir the comedian.

The Lamb of God in the sanctuary and the west end rose depicting The Dove of Peace came from the former St Mary's Anglican Church in Merivale. These date from the 1880s.55 The suggestion to give these to the chapel was made by Adeline Turner, a Merivale parishioner and Hon. Sec. of the HLVA.56 There were leadlights with red borders, from St Mary's, filling the windows by the vestries.57

The carving
All sanctuary carving is in oak. The majority was done by Frederick Gumsey (1863-1953). Later carving for the chapel was executed in conjunction with Jake Vivian (Gumsey's sole, articled apprentice who joined him in 1926), or by Vivian alone. The Gumsey studio was at 180 Fendalton Road and he was a most influential and gifted carver and sculptor. Many of his works grace ecclesiastical and public buildings and monuments, including the Christchurch Anglican Cathedral and the Bridge of Remembrance.

The altar, reredos and four riddle posts with angels (which hold candlesticks) were carved in 1930-31. The Bishop's chair was probably executed shortly after. Underneath the canopy-work the reredos incorporates the gilded figure of The Risen Christ. In niches are St Mary BV and St John the Evangelist with the chalice and Host. These two figures were originally in reversed places with Mary looking at Christ.

The outer frame of the reredos depicts entwined thistle, rose and shamrock plants with a grape-vine above. The bas-relief panels show Christ healing the sick and the Samaritan aiding the wounded man on his donkey. This latter panel has a symbolic link with the icon of Gallipoli, The Man With the Donkey, painted by Horace Moore-Jones.

The central altar panel shows the pelican 'in its piety'. It feeds its young in the nest with blood from its breast, a symbol of Christ, self-sacrifice and by extension, nursing. This and the two bas-relief panels and two attendant figures of the reredos were taken out in the early 1930s and lightened so as to be more visible.

The riddle posts were connected in pairs originally by curtains and placed at the ends of the altar, when it was joined to the reredos. The joinery firm responsible for the altar, reredos and riddle posts, was Geo. Rich & Sons. It is likely that all of this carving was paid for out of chapel funds.

In 1963 a wish of the chapel management committee to remove the reredos was not acted on. However the altar has become free-standing to suit modern liturgy. Formerly there was a sanctuary lamp above the altar and this may have been removed at this time.

Vivian designed and executed the altar rails in May of 1956 and hymn-book cupboard and prayer desk in October of 1952. Both British and New Zealand flowers are shown in the rails. The cupboard has a traditional linen-fold ornament and Gothic tracerv on it. The joinery work on these was by Bert Sherwood.

A receipt and estimate are in the chapel casket. Jake Vivian clarified dates and attribution.
Other art works and furnishings

The font was given by Sir Robert Heaton Rhodes in 1927 in memory of Jessie, Lady Rhodes and 'A.M.T.' Its alabaster bowl was subsequently broken. This was replaced in kauri by R.R. Beauchamp for the Christchurch School of Nursing Association commemorative service in 1977. The bowl and cover feature the only Maori motifs in the chapel.

The silver-plated casket containing a few records connected with the building of the chapel was deposited in the sanctuary wall on 30 June 1936 and has been opened and added to since. The casket was given by Dr Fox on his retirement. It holds:

- An invitation to, and programme and photograph of, the foundation stone ceremony;
- A receipt from Frederick Gumsey of £100 for carving the reredos and angels and an estimate of £100 for panels and figures;
- A receipt from the HLVA;
- Notes about the chapel by Adeline Turner, 31 October 1930 and by Grace Widdowson, 22 October 1976.

Plate and communion vessels are held securely in the vestries. Two, large, altar candlesticks given by Sir Hugh and Evelyn, Lady Acland were reportedly stolen in the mid-1980s. Towards the back of the chapel there is a table in memory of Kassie Turner who died on 26 July, 1922. The interior also features fine, wrought iron lamps.

Memorial Plaques

There are plaques in this order on the liturgical west wall. Some biographical details given are additional to those on the plaques.

Thomas L. Crooke MD. Medical Superintendent 1899-1910. Died 1 Nov. 1943.

Mary J. Irwin. Died 29 June 1929 as a result of duty.

Colina M. Howden. Died 22 June 1927.

59 All nurses hold the qualification of State Registered Nurse (SRN) or Registered Maternity Nurse (RMN) or equivalents. Space prevents fuller treatment of the plaques.
The chapel withstood a demolition threat from the Hospital Board in the mid-1970s for temporary operating theatres and a demolition order in early 1989 from the Hospital Board for parking and access. In both cases reaction was strong and an alternative solution was found. A community group, the Friends of the Chapel, was formed in 1989.

Twice escaped demolition

The chapel withstood a demolition threat from the Hospital Board in the mid-1970s for temporary operating theatres and a demolition order in early 1989 from the Hospital Board for parking and access. In both cases reaction was strong and an alternative solution was found. A community group, the Friends of the Chapel, was formed in 1989.

In early 1989 (after months of preparation), the Historic Places Trust reclassified the chapel to a 'B' building and commissioned a structural report which showed it to be sound. Because of its great significance the chapel has a Protection Notice signed by the Minister of Conservation, the Hon. Philip Woolliaston on 4 August 1989.

Some chaplains had duties at several local hospitals. In addition representatives from other denominations have been appointed as part of their duties to visit the sick in Christchurch hospitals and contribute to chaplains' councils and conferences. Individual ministers also visit their own parishioners in hospital.

Related memorials in New Zealand and overseas.

There are other local memorials to Marquette nurses such as the twenty-bed ward named after the ship and a plaque in Waimate Hospital for sisters Clark, Fox and Gorman.

The New Zealand Nurses' Memorial Fund, to aid nurses in need, was raised as a national memorial to the sixteen New Zealand nurses who died on, or as a result of, active service in World War I. There is a collection box (disused), at the entry to the chapel for this fund with the State Medal on it. This was carved by chaplain Henry Williams. The Nurses' Bell in the Wellington Carillon is the other national memorial to these women.

In York Minster a plaque by the medieval 'Five Sisters' stained glass window also records the names of the New Zealand nurses. This window was restored to commemorate the 1465 nurses, VADs, munition and other women workers of the Empire who died in World War I.

Six nurses and five VADs from New Zealand died on active service in World War II. Over 3000 Commonwealth and Empire nurses and midwives died. They are commemorated in the upper chapel of Bishop Islip's Chantry in Westminster Abbey. This chapel is thought to be the only one dedicated to nurses and midwives in a 'national shrine' in the world.64

Conclusion

In June 1990 the Friends of the Chapel co-ordinated the preservation glazing of the chapel's stained glass windows. The materials and labour were generously donated by local businesses.

On 26 June 1990, the Christchurch City Council decided to allocate $50,000 from its Planning Policy sub-budget for restoration of the chapel. It is expected that most of these funds will be used to build a new porch for the chapel to a design by Tony Ussher of Skews, Hey, Ussher Architects.

If possible bricks and slates from the demolition of buildings of similar vintage and construction will be used for the porch. When the present corridor leading into the chapel is demolished with surrounding buildings (possibly in late 1990), the chapel will be free-standing.

The future maintenance of the chapel will be administered by a trust formed out of the Friends of the Chapel and other groups. It is proposed that a land swap will take place between the city council and the hospital board, with the land around the chapel landscaped and kept as an historic reserve to be used and appreciated by patients, staff and the wider public.
