A book our readers will enjoy and we recommend it with full confidence.

Across Africa on Foot, by Ronald A. Monson. This was a remarkable journey, not across a parallel of latitude, but from Cape Town to Cairo. With a companion (also as the author, an Australian) they left Cape Town September 8, 1928 and reached Cairo December 21, 1929, having covered on foot 7,620 miles. To the pedestrians some of the miles—indeed many of them—seemed leagues, while often the mountain ranges, rivers, dreadful swamps, nearly broke their hearts. It is an almost incredible journey, and only the dour pluck and endurance of the pair brought them through. It is deeply interesting, and with a good map, one can check their experiences, in the jungle proper, with others who have been in similar dangers. H. V. Morton's "How I Found Livingstone," also his "Darkest Africa" help to make clearer the terrific difficulty of the African jungle even today in many places.

Men and Mountains, by M. Ilin. This can almost be said to be a work on Geography but if all books on Geography could be made as interesting as this one, we would have quite a large number of students.
