

Literary Institute, Chatham
24th June 1869

Gentlemen,

The Committee of the Literary Institute beg to draw the attention of the members of your Society to the efforts which are at present being made to render the Institute effective in every respect, and among others to encourage the formation, in connection with it, of a Debating and Literary Club or Society. We beg therefore to suggest that the objects for which your Society was established will be so far subserved by these arrangements, and that your members might at any time receive their portion of at no further cost than that which secures all the other privileges of the Institute. You

To the Members of the Literary Society

are no