to the upper storeys, and this is supplied with plenty of light by means of handsome leadlight windows of cathedral glass. On the pediments of the balustrades are handsome bronze figures holding Newell electric lights. The staircase is laid in heavy Wilton carpet, with brass nosings, especially imported from England, and the upstairs corridors are similarly treated. At the southern end, on the first floor is a ladies' drawing-room, handsomely furnished in the Chippendale style, and here is a speaking telephone, by which communication can be had with any portion of the house. Following along the corridor are several suites of rooms, all of which are airy and well lighted, and these, as indeed all the rooms, are furnished with exquisite taste, the furniture having been all selected by Mrs. Herman. A number of single and double bedrooms run along both sides of the corridor and at the north end is a comfortable sitting-room. A feature of all these rooms is the lighting, each being supplied with an electric reading lamp over the bed, which can be converted into a table lamp. The second floor, which is almost solely devoted to bedrooms, is furnished in the same luxurious manner, and is also fitted with telephones. On both floors are well-appointed bathrooms for ladies and gentlemen, fitted with hot and cold plunge and shower baths. All the bedrooms are fitted with wardrobes and electric bells communicating with a recording and registering dial in the vestibule on the ground floor. The hotel is fitted with a very fine hot water supply worked by one of Hement's patent steam generators, which ensures an ample supply in all parts of the building.

The contractor for the building was Mr. W. H. Bowen, while Mr. A. Bond was clerk of works, the plumbing was carried out by Messrs. Hement Bros., and the joinery work was in the hands of Mr. G. Watson. The whole of the electric light fittings, which are both handsome and unique, were supplied and executed by Messrs. Turnbull and Jones. The majority of the furniture has been supplied by Messrs. A. J. White, while the D.I.C. has also contributed its quota.

Altogether Warner's is now one of the most up-to-date hotels in Australasia, providing as it does over 120 rooms with every modern convenience, and with such hosts as Mr. and Mrs. Herman to conduct it, patrons can be perfectly sure that they will have every comfort and attention.

BALLANTYNES' WORKMANSHIP IS EXCELLENT.
