

those which nondescript folks have been taught to style "draperies." The point to be observed in respect to principle in this matter is, that the subject is literally and absolutely clad in the costume he wore in life, without any compromise whatever. We rejoice to observe this, and regard it as one of the healthiest signs of art that it should be done so, that the observer sees more of the man than of his dress—the last, however, is disposed with suitable art. See the figure from what point we will, it composes well, and is expressive behind as well as before. This is due to the thoroughness of the sculptor's conception of his theme, and the care with which that conception is wrought out. Down the figure's back no meaningless cascade of "drapery" falls in an attempt to hide a disproportion or a feeble posé; its legs bear the man, its arms belong to him.
